Workshop #FS104: IPV: Culturally Sensitive Interventions with African Americans

The impact of intimate partner violence affects not only the victim. Children residing in the homes where family violence occurs are the unintended victims. They are affected psychologically, emotionally and socially as a result of witnessed abuse. In some instance, children may become the intended targets of the abuse. This workshop will examine intimate partner violence and the impact it has on the well-being of children in the home, school and community. To set the context for this workshop, participants will engage in a review and extensive discussion of the prevalence of IPV among families of color, current policies, laws, and best practice models. Case studies will be used for assessment, prevention and intervention knowledge and skill building.
