Sex discrimination in the workplace remains one of the primary barriers to women's economic security. Women make less than 80 cents to every man's $1.00. Women experience sexual harassment and discrimination based on their status as caregivers or because of their pregnancy or pregnancy-related conditions. In kind, women who experience domestic violence and sexual assault face discrimination and bias. In this presentation, Professor Runge will discuss these challenges as well as federal, state and local laws that have been adopted to address this issue.

Presented by
ROBIN RUNGE
Associate Professorial Lecturer in Law,
George Washington University Law School